squares. The first player to achieve vertical, horizontal, or diagonal lines wins. Alternatively, you can buy a pre-printed bingo card or find a free card online that offers a different way to play. You don't have to go over the number of gifts because this card has pictures of baby things that are likely to be in a pile of gifts such as teddy bears, books or bibs. So, you're in the baby shower, cooing over baby items and discussing your baby on the way. How difficult is it to avoid saying the word baby? Very hard -- much harder than you think! So, it's a game. This is often played by giving each guest a clothespin. Guests have their clothespins inserted into ribbons or yarn lines between the hems of a sleeve or shirt, or around the neck. Every time someone mistakes and says baby, the person grabbing the ad, slip-up, takes the perpetrator's clothespin and keeps it. The man who accumulated the most pins at the end of the shower wins. My mom's belly is probably quite big around shower time. But how big exactly is it? You can create a game to guess the answer to that question. During the shower, a spool of ribbon, or a string or ball of yarn, plus scissors passed around. Each guest is about to estimate how big it is around their mother's belly. To show guesswork, each guest cuts out a ribbon, string or yarn that they think is the closest size to the middle of a pregnant woman. The ad then placed a string of each guest in mom's stomach and see who had the closest guess-- the man Winner! You can test the thought speed and sight of scrambled game party attendees using the names of baby related items. To set up scrambled words, create a list of 15 or 20 terms, such as blankets, nipples, cradles, diapers, and strollers, before showering. Then scramble the letters of each word, for example, write a tiare for the rattle. Advertised in the shower, give each guest a piece of paper with scrambled words on it or post a word on a wall or blackboard for everyone to see. Set the timer for 5 minutes. Anyone who solves the most scrambled words in that time wins! Changing diapers is not easy. Team diaper duty is even stronger! To play Team Diaper Duty, pair guests into two teams. The team takes off their clothes from the dolls, takes off their diapers, lays new diapers as needed for real babies, and alternates between wearing them again. Best of ads, each team member can only use one hand! The event, in which two people try to orchestrate with just one hand, will create a clumsy doll and a lot of laughs there. Each team using a stopwatch: The fastest team wins. Baby Picture games are great icebreakers for showers where not all guests know each other. Include a baby shower invitation and a request for each guest to bring one of their baby photos. Then hang all the photos that everyone can see in the shower. (Some people suggest hanging it on a clothes line or laying it all on the table. No matter which way you mark it, you don't want to use pushpins or tape; a photo of the ad number; give each guest a piece of paper and a pen; write down who each guest is pictured with; you can use this event for about 15 minutes of time; and guests can continue showering throughout the shower; every time you finish it, the person with the most accurate guess wins. Set up this game before showering by creating small slips and writing one of 25 baby-related terms on each. Fold the slip and place in a bowl. Use an advertising blackboard or unaltered whiteboard, or pin a large piece of paper to the tape or wall where they are all easily viewable. When you're ready to play, put your guests on three or four different teams. Decide who the first team will be, and let the person randomly select one of the paper slips and show it to everyone except their own team members. The person who draws must try to draw a picture of the term, and the man's You should guess what is at a preset time(typically 1-2 minutes). Hint: Unplugging bottles isn't too difficult, so think of terms that might be difficult, like trim! This game is a great way to remind your mom and tell your child, what life was like with the year of his birth. To set this one up, ask each guest, along with an invitation, to bring things in a time capsule for the baby. Each entry should represent today's culture, such as important headline newspapers, celebrity tabloids, DVDs or CDs of popular movie or singing sensations, photos of the town where babies can live, or personal letters about what it's like in today's society, or personal letters about what it's like to be a baby's mom and dad. Advertised in the shower, each guest displays the items she brought and explains why she made that choice. Items are placed in a treasure chest to be kept for storage until the parent decides the child is old enough to appreciate the meaning. This game gives everyone a chance to laugh, and, guest of honor. To play, the box requires a blindfold and a variety of items. First, mom blindfolds and places a box of things in front of her. She must dig into the box and choose an item, then try to guess what it is to use a sense of touch. Advertising you can play this game by inserting baby-related items into the box, as recommended by most. You can also get something more creative with goofy, zanes or slightly off-color items - if it suits the crowd - and you can expect a lot of laughs. In this traditional baby shower game, you will find photos of expecting parents and son-in-law sets, including brothers, sisters and family pets. Copy the photo before showering, then copy and trim your eyes, nose, mouth, ears, hair, and other facial features. Next, create an outline of the baby's head on paper and make enough copies for each guest. To play, guests need to select different facial features from the trim pile in the photo and glue it to a copy of the outline. After all, the creation of each guest is an expression of what a baby looks like (funny or serious!) this will be. For more great traditional articles, check out the links on the next page.
